Story Sharing and Open Dialogue

Uganda effectively participated in the UNFSS and is considered a front-runner in advancing food systems transformation. To oversee and coordinate the implementation of the country's food systems agenda, a National Food Systems Coordination Committee (NFSCC) was set up in late 2022. So, what works? What does it take for a country to coordinate diverse multi-stakeholders for meaningful food systems transformation impact. How can "what works" be amplified and supported in Uganda and adopted or adjusted for other country contexts?

This two-hour generative dialogue is anchored in diverse stories of practical experience lived in, and on the ground of, Uganda. It isn't research, it isn't theory, it isn't generalizations. It is an opportunity to appreciatively share practice (successes and failures); affirm key messages and insights; and amplify and apply learning through public reflection and commitment.

Drawing on stories of practical experience from Uganda, this first in an ongoing series of open Shared Learning for food systems transformation events will:

- Anchor and amplify diverse stories of practice with impact and open a participatory dialogue for learning and change.
- Provoke participants beyond the comfort of their own vision of "the country system" and consider differences that might make a meaningful difference to their own work.
- Reflect on what is shared and heard from participant perspective (individual, country and global contexts); engage in shared learning; and consider how their own practice might change.
- Appreciate a selection of national convenors and the ecosystem of support around concrete country challenges as input for the Food Systems Stocktaking Moment (Rome, Italy from 24 – 26 July 2023).
